Founder Jeff Wolf Steps Down as Director of Sensatex, Inc.

BETHESDA, MARYLAND (October 15, 2004): Sensatex, Inc., the leading developer and provider of smart textile materials and applications announced today announced that Jeff Wolf, one of the company's original founders, stepped down as a director to pursue other business interests. Mr. Wolf retains significant ownership in the company.

Mr. Wolf founded Sensatex in 2000, securing a license for the "wearable motherboard" technology which is the basis of the company's "SmartShirt system" from Georgia Tech. As Chairman and Chief Executive Officer through June 2004, Mr. Wolf guided the initial growth of the company, securing the company's contract with the Department of Defense's Technical Support Working Group (TSWG) to develop the "SmartShirt" technology for first responders. Mr. Wolf will continue as an informal advisor to the CEO.

"I cannot say enough about what Jeff Wolf has meant to Sensatex," said Robert G. Kalik, CEO of the company, "his vision and guidance established the company and developed a technology that has multiple applications, across many industries. The future success of Sensatex will be based on Jeff's foresight to commercialize this technology." -30-
